The Soul Journey Wheel presents a systems-level view of the life–death–afterlife cycle. It integrates recurring patterns reported across spiritual traditions, near-death experiences, reincarnation research, consciousness studies, and other inquiry pathways. The model is intended as an orienting map for exploration rather than a definitive statement of what occurs beyond physical life.

Visual Description

A circular systems map illustrating a non-linear model of the soul's journey across life, death, and post-physical states. At the center is the Soul, representing enduring consciousness and the observer behind multiple life experiences.

The inner ring depicts the recurring cycle of incarnation, including birth, embodied life, awakening, service, physical death, life review, healing and integration, reorientation, and return through reincarnation or other forms of transition.

A second ring highlights the dominant states of consciousness associated with each phase, such as forgetting, exploration, remembering, expression, release, understanding, integration, and preparation.

A third ring presents illustrative parallels found across spiritual, philosophical, and religious traditions, emphasizing recurring themes rather than doctrinal equivalence.

The outer ring maps evidence streams and inquiry pathways—including near-death experiences, reincarnation research, consciousness studies, mystical experiences, religious traditions, mediumship reports, Akashic traditions, and emerging research—that contribute to contemporary exploration of life beyond physical existence.

The diagram is intended as an orienting framework rather than a definitive description of reality. It synthesizes recurring patterns reported across multiple traditions, experiential accounts, and research domains while acknowledging that many questions remain open to investigation.
